

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Is it not a circumstance worthy of notice, that the district in which the cholera has assumed the most formidable character and carried off most victims is precisely that in which the Commissioners of Sewers have recently been most active—new and deep sewers having just been constructed in all its streets and passages—viz., in the district of Carnaby Market, St. James's, Westminster?

That some local cause has imparted this great fatality to its character cannot, I think, be doubted; and the great increase in the number of cases over that in former visitations of this disease would lead us to think that cause of recent creation.

Now, Sir, is it to be found in the manner in which these large and deep sewers communicate with the drains of the separate houses? Have the Commissioners powers enabling them to enforce the construction of stink-traps at all the entrances of these private drains? or is that construction left to the option of the landlord? and if so, have they been made? For it is self-evident, that the freer the passage is made for the exit of the soil from the houses, the more free will become the ingress for mephitic gases of the sewer, unless intercepted by properly constructed traps.

The insertion of this in your influential journal would insure immediate inquiry into this matter.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
13, Savill-row, St. James's. JAMES NICHOLS.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—Is it not a circumstance worthy of notice, that the district in which the cholera has assumed the most formidable character and carried off most victims is precisely that in which the Commissioners of Sewers have recently been most active—new and deep sewers having just been constructed in all its streets and passages—viz., in the district of Carnaby Market, St. James's, Westminster?

That some local cause has imparted this great fatality to its character cannot, I think, be doubted; and the great increase in the number of cases over that in former visitations of this disease would lead us to think that cause of recent creation.

Now, Sir, is it to be found in the manner in which these large and deep sewers communicate with the drains of the separate homes? Have the Commissioners powers enabling them to enforce the construction of stink-traps at all the entrances of these private drains? or is that construction left to the option of the landlord? and if so, have they been made? For it is self-evident, that the freer the passage made for the exit of the soil from the houses, the more free will become the ingress for mephitic gases of the sewer unless intercepted by properly constructed traps.

The insertion of this in your influential journal would insure immediate inquiry into this matter.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

13, Savill-row, St. James's.

James Nichols.

"To the Editor of the Times," 5 September 1854, 10.

I printed this letter—excerpted as Document 21.I in Investigating Cholera in Broad Street—from a microfilm owned by the Michigan State University Libraries. The electronic Times Digital Archive has a different edition for 5 September 1854.