THE UNITED STATES.

(From a special correspondent.)

The United States have had a close and cordial connection with our country and our interests for many years past. The commercial relations between the two nations have been constantly increasing, and the friendship and confidence which have existed between them have been strengthened by the reciprocal obligations which they mutually bear. The United States have always been our foremost and most valuable allies, and we have always regarded them as such.

[Continued with various news items and updates on American affairs, including politics, economics, and social issues.]