Beginning in 1985, a coalition of religious, labor, civil rights, community and anti-apartheid organizations have launched a campaign calling on Royal Dutch/Shell and Mobil Oil to sever their business ties to South Africa until apartheid is dismantled. Following the designation of Shell and Mobil as "partners in apartheid" by the religious institutions working through ICCR, an expanding coalition launched the Shell boycott in January, 1986.

Both Mobil and Royal Dutch/Shell supply petroleum products to the South African government, including the police and military there. Mobil is the largest U.S. investor in South Africa. Shell makes a major contribution to South Africa's earnings by exporting 6 million tons of South African coal a year. Each company reports South African investments totalling more than $400 million.

The coalition is calling on Royal Dutch/Shell, through its U.S. subsidiary Shell Oil, and Mobil Oil to withdraw their assets from South Africa and sever all business ties to that country until apartheid is abolished.
Thank you for your support of the campaign urging Shell and Mobil Oil to end all business ties to South Africa.

Dear Mr. Richardson

Apartheid is abhorrent to my commitment to the dignity and basic rights of all human beings. I support the demands by religious, labor and community leaders that Royal Dutch/Shell sever all business ties to South Africa's racist system of apartheid.

Therefore I urge Royal Dutch/Shell to

- Withdraw its investments from South Africa;
- Terminate all license and franchise agreements with South African entities;
- Cut off the flow of all its products and services to and from South Africa;
- Publicly inform the white minority government that the company will only resume its business in South Africa when apartheid is abolished.

Please let me know your response to this request.
