MOTOROLA SUPPORTS RACISM in South Africa

MOTOROLA supports apartheid in South Africa by:

- selling two-way radios to South African police.
- expanding sales in South Africa where electronic market is growing 25-30% per year.
- providing electronic and communications equipment to the South African government.
- purchasing ads in the South African armed forces journal.
- making sales of approximately $500,000 to South African security forces.
- refusing to withdraw financial support from South Africa as Polaroid has.
- refusing to pledge no expansion in South Africa as GM, Control Data, and Gulf & Western have.
- maintaining a subsidiary in South Africa which can be legally forced to provide highly technical and strategic equipment essential for South African military forces.

Motorola states its presence in South Africa benefits the black majority. However:

- a January, 1978 study of the Senate Subcommittee on African Affairs reported: "The net effect of American investment has been to strengthen the economic and military self-sufficiency of South Africa's apartheid regime."

- Despite dramatic increases in U.S. private investment, the gap between white and black wages has grown wider.

Call/write to protest Motorola's support for South African apartheid.
